Intel's processor is drawing 307W to slightly edge past the 5950X in Cinebench, which only draws around 214W. It's hard to cool 307W over extended periods without your computer becoming really loud, even with a water cooling setup.. Now, if they had that kind of cooling available, they could have easily gotten a lot more performance out of the Ryzen, while the i9 is already operating at the ...
